corporate leaders and now they report their findings to you after introducing compelling data on the nature of the gender gap they use each chapter to address a different common argument against gender balance their statistics are occasionally confusing or even a bit contradictory but their discussions are impressive and sage without being dry or boring the authors solid arguments against common gender misconceptions offer executives and hr professionals new insights into positive changes they can implement getabstract recommends this worthy overview to businesspeople seeking to address the gender gap book publisher oxford up women in the americas examines the respective roles of men and women in development roles determined not by biology but by social political and economic influences that can be affected by policies and strategies prevailing social policies in the region often view men as income earners and women as wives and mothers neglecting the role of women in the work force and as community leaders in fact between their economic social and domestic responsibilities women often have double or triple workdays based on the central tenet that understanding gender differences is vital to development planning women in the americas focuses on the status of women in social policy the labor force the political process and the environment it also examines how the concept of gender equity could be better incorporated into mainstream development policy this study employed 32 qualitative in depth interviews with senior level communications leaders to understand the journey that women and men go through to become communications leaders perceptions of communications leaders factors contributing to the gender gap and ultimately what can be done to close the gender gap participants of this study are among some of today s most senior level communications leaders with the average participant having 29 years of work experience in the field of communications there is no gender difference between success in establishing a business once both males and females have the same preference to self employment and attempts towards establishing a new business however the gender gap tends to be huge when it comes to individual preferences and attempts to start up an entrepreneurial activity in this study we empirically estimate the role of inequality in individual and country attributes between man and woman in the bridging this gender entrepreneurship gap using Oaxaca type decomposition and its extensions on choice of weighting matrix for non linear probability models we found that differences in both individual as well as country characteristics largely favor males while the former play greater role in explaining the gender gap about a one third of the gender gap in both latent as well as nascent entrepreneurship can be traced back to females owning smaller endowments than males empirical results also show differences in return to measured characteristics favor males nevertheless a portion of gender gap that is unexplained by the differences in these characteristics and their coefficients or return could still indicate gender discrimination the aim of this work is to share information on two very interesting yet debatable issues within the field of translation studies namely gender and translation in an attempt to bridge the gap between theory and practice given the important relationship between translation and gender since the beginning of the theoretical debate in feminist translation studies the aim of this edited volume is to determine and analyse how this relationship has been approached in different countries not only in Europe but also worldwide feminist translation is undoubtedly a very interesting and widespread phenomenon which includes and combines questions of language culture gender identity and sexual equality feminist translation studies has established itself as a solid field of research and practice in many countries and its purpose is to reverse the subordinate role of both women and translators in society by challenging and fighting against what is perceived as patriarchal language there are still numerous issues that can be taken into account when focusing on translation and gender and this volume intends to be part of a wider discussion on translation studies the volume intends to outline how scholars in various contexts have approached the question of gender and translation the use misuse of the term feminist translation the problematic issue of bridging the gap between theory and practice and to open a new discussion on this field of research which we believe is still a very interesting one to exploit less than 30 of bicycling trips taken in the United States are done by women this study seeks to understand the leading reasons for the gender gap in cycling and ways to mitigate these factors as to promote women participation in the activity the findings of this report indicate that infrastructure safety and societal norms are barriers to women s participation in biking bridging the gap thus becomes not just a problem of public service and social stigma but of the utmost importance is the inclusion of a diverse group users in discussions of city planning the normalization of an ecological sensitive approach to planning could start to better address gender issues in transport
